

Accreditation and Language Statement

The University of Western Ontario, established in 1878, is an accredited degree granting institution incorporated under law by the Ontario legislature. The University is also a member of The Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, The International Association of Universities and the Association of Commonwealth Universities.

The University of Western Ontario has been an accredited degree granting institution since 1878 when it was first incorporated by an Act of the Ontario Provincial Legislature. The most recent version of the Act, continuing the degree-granting powers of the University indefinitely, is The University of Western Ontario Act 1982 (as amended 1988). A copy of that Act can be found at:

http://www.uwo.ca/univsec/about/western_university_act.html.

Western is a comprehensive university offering a wide range of undergraduate, graduate and professional degrees. At the undergraduate level, Western offers three-year, four-year, and four-year Honors degrees. An Honors degree (or equivalent) is normally required for admission to graduate programs.

Unless otherwise specified, all courses at The University of Western Ontario are fully taught and assessed in English.